Comment: We will likely move in the next couple of years. So it simply doesn't make sense for us to invest in solar panels on our current home in Boise. But we want to support and promote clean energy in Idaho.

Community solar is such a creative solution for folks like me. I understand that the solar credits stay with the customer, not the residence, if we do end up moving.

Bravo to the PUC, Idaho Power, and other organizations who brainstorm this creative solution and are making it happen.

Comment: My husband and I live in Boise and own two electric cars. We have 3 small children. We are extremely concerned about climate change and what this means for ours and our children's future. We are concerned about longer, more extreme wildfire seasons, risk to fragile ecosystems, and that some of the things we love most about Boise - access to Bogus and Sun Valley and McCall for winter sports - will be threatened. We are very excited to sign up for Idaho Power's community solar program and feel the cost is reasonable. Community Solar is the future and we are very happy Idaho power has made the effort to take this important step.
