Comment: All discussion of customer on-site generation should consider the difference between on-site generation strictly for self-consumption (i.e. non-exported to grid) and on-site generation intended for intermittent export to the grid. In ALL cases, the customer should have the absolute right to self-generate for self-consumption. This right should be spelled out in an official PUC statement that all entities have the absolute right to generate electricity for their own consumption, a Distributed Energy Resource Bill of Rights, as it were. Limiting non-exported electricity generation in any way violates individual liberties. We should be allowed to buy our own batteries, fill them with electricity from our own solar panels, and use that electricity any way we want without interference by Idaho Power.
