Comment: As an American, and as a customer of Idaho Power I do expect net metering customers to be treated and billed fairly. We are all in this together.

Thank you!

Marcus

Comment: I am retired and on a fixed income. Before retiring I invested a lot of money in a solar array to offset future predictable cost increases in electricity. Since installation in 2014, my net metering system has returned 43,539 kWh back to the grid. Given the current rates this comes to nearly $4,000 worth of FREE electricity I have given to Idaho Power to use as they see fit.

I think I have made a substantial contribution to not only Idaho Power's bottom line but also to shrinking my "carbon footprint". A fair price is not too much to ask, especially since it is my investment that is at risk, not Idaho Power's.

Comment: Idaho Power needs to treat net metering customers fairly. Idaho Power needs to keep their word to consumers and businesses who in good faith switched to (or started businesses to provide) solar power with the promise that Idaho Power will purchase excess power and charge reasonable meter fees.

For years Idaho Power has gotten away with raising rates on existing customers to pay for infrastructure for new customers... Then they got paid by the new customers and rates to existing customers never went down. I've never understood that...

Comment: Just read Ben Otto's article in today's Statesman, and am outraged that you are reducing the rate at which you pay customers who may have spent many thousands of their own dollars to help create clean energy. You say you are committed to clean energy yet you do this evil deed to punish those who help you achieve this supposed goal of yours. You should be ashamed!

Comment: We are trying to reduce our power bill and support clean energy, so we installed solar panels and are now a net metering customer. We feel it is imperative that net metering customers be treated fairly, and that Idaho Power not change the net metering rates. People should be encouraged to protect the environment in every way possible, not be punished for doing so! Please keep the net metering rates at their current level!

Comment: America's future is in producing clean, renewable energy. While our federal and state governments refuse to invest in clean, renewable energy, individual Idahoans have chosen to take on substantial risk and invest in solar energy. They have made significant investment in solar energy systems with a certain payback period in mind. This Commission should protect these pioneering Idaho citizens and their significant financial investments by requiring Idaho Power to pay these investors the same rate that the homeowner pays for the protons and electrons that move through the wires that connect their homes to the electric grid. It's the right thing to do for these pioneering homeowners, the right thing to do for our country, and the right thing to do for our planet. Please do the right thing!
