Comment: "Idaho Power's latest rooftop solar case is the most important yet, and could result in average compensation rates to solar owners dropping by over 30%.

That's why it's critical for us to tell the PUC to once again hold multiple public hearings in cities across southern Idaho, AND offer a virtual option.

In this day and age, public agencies are more than capable of using software like Zoom or WebEx to allow local residents to give virtual video testimony and watch the hearing from their home, if they're not able to attend the hearing in-person.

This is the case for many rural residents, elderly folks, disabled individuals, youth, families with young children, and people with limited transportation options, including low-income folks and undocumented Idahoans.

All these people will be the most impacted by Idaho Power's proposal to make solar less affordable. They deserve the opportunity to make their voices heard with the decision-makers at the PUC."
